About the Artist

Paper has always been a primary material in Justine Smith's work. She is currently concerned with the concept of money, and how it touches almost every aspect of our lives. Smith is interested in money as a conduit of power, and also in the value systems with which we surround it. On a physical level a banknote is just a piece of paper, but it is what a banknote actually represents that is central to Smith's work. Through her collages, prints and sculptures she examines our relationship with money in a political, moral and social sense, while also exploiting the physical beauty of the notes. Justine Smith has exhibited in galleries and museums internationally, and her work has been acquired for the collections of the British Council, the UK Government Art Collection, various financial institutions and international corporations, and numerous private collections.
